Christopher Hodges

Being Human

6 - 27 October, 2018

What is it about certain images that attract us, that catch our eye, that thrill us, perplex us and challenge us.

These questions can describe our reaction to abstract art.

In this latest body of work Hodges has produced paintings that continue his exploration of geometry and precision in paint. It will be his first exhibition in many years that focuses solely on painting.

The seeming simplicity of these works is belied by the complexity of the brush marks and the subtlety of his choice of colour.

What differentiates his work is the soft shimmering surfaces and the pulsating forms.

Christopher Hodges has been a practicing artist for over forty years. His work is held in the National and State collections, and many corporate and private collections both in Australia and Internationally.
